

TURKEY'S FUTURE IS STILL BIG PROBLEM

Hints of the Difficulties in the Way of Securing a Peace Government—Militarism is Concentrated in Constantinople.

London, Aug. 21.—While hopeful views still prevail regarding the new regime in Turkey, there is a growing disposition to believe that future developments will not be in the same happy strain as the early history of the revolution. This may be only the reaction from the optimism with which Europe generally has welcomed the progress of events so far, but stories are gaining currency of the condition of affairs in Constantinople which suggest that Turkey's salvation will not be worked out without serious trouble in the city where the nucleus of the reform of the nation is concentrated.

An interview has been given, by a Turk who, while fully in sympathy with the Young Turk ideals, long held and still holds an important diplomatic post, under Abdul Hamid, it will be understood who his identity cannot be disclosed when it is said that he has taken the constitutional movement will not have obtained complete success until the present regime is succeeded on the throne by his younger brother.

Liberal Ruler Hoped For.
"Long before the revolution was accomplished," said the official, "the accession of Reischad, who would undoubtedly succeed Abdul, though he has been a close prisoner in the palace thirty years, was looked forward to as the state of the liberation of Turkey. It is quite well known that Reischad would treat the constitution. He is in sympathy with the ideals of the young Turks. Some surprise has been expressed in Europe at the method by which the country generally received its new liberator. The Turkish revolution really is not so backward and ignorant as it is supposed to be. It is in the capable hands of playing its part in a constitutional government. The danger lies in the Sultan. He seems to have accepted the situation graciously, but so long as he occupies the throne, though all the elements of constitutional liberty remain a peril."

Letters which have begun to arrive in London from special correspondents who started to Constantinople on receipt of news of the revolution, do not reflect these favorable statements. The Sultan's reception by the populace as he went to the Selamlik for the proclamation of the constitution show him standing up in his carriage to acknowledge the plaudits of his admiring and grateful subjects.

"Yet crowds," writes one correspondent, "assembled to watch the procession to Yildiz Kiosk in dusty attire, some wore the red and white costume of the Young Turk. The one idea pervading the concourse was to see the Sultan and give vent to feelings of thankfulness and loyalty."

Another correspondent writes: "Sultan and cabinet are alive with the excitement of the revolution. The Sultan is now in the hands of the 'last' fortitude. Little children were seen to be crying and 'justified' two words last of them dared to utter in their own homes. Before they existed in the form of ideas, but were far less real than heaven and hell. Soldiers, tradesmen and customers even to the beggars, were wearing and wearing that were being hawked at every fork and corner, and for everybody's nose could and should speak."

Picture Despatch Fails.
"Most in request of these was a huge engraving of Izzet Pasha in his former and present state, representing him as smoking his cigarette before a 'new' shield and a 'new' flag. Being up a companion ladder of the Marianne with a sack at his heels. Another showed Zeki Pasha, who recently refused to give water to 300 demonstrators at the palace, being sent to the 'new' flames by a pair of devils, and there were many others of this character. One of the other hand, a postcard was freely offered with the portrait of the Sultan between two flags and the words 'Liberty, equality, fraternity in French-Turkish.'"

Another correspondent sends the details of the fate of Ekin Pasha, who, for years was the most dreaded man in Constantinople, and probably the most criminal in Europe. He was literally torn limb from limb at Bursa, where he had been exiled, but where he continued the same practices which had made him hated in Constantinople. He left his home with a gang of ruffians bent on thrashing a lack official. The crowd heard of his errand and rushed him, but he pushed him through and spat in the face of an old and renowned priest, and a person of wealth seized the man. A truck was overturned, and the pasha was thrown to the ground, beaten, and trampled on, and sent to death with indescribable dignity.

The scarcely less notorious traitor of Yildiz and the Asiatic villages of the Empress and Mamma, Cherkes Mehmed, though still alive, had a fearful experience. He was seized by the people, who tied a rope round his waist and measured his face with paint and lace. Some say his famous flowing beard was cut off and others that it merely was pointed. In this guise he was led through the streets and subjected to every indignity, in spite of his treaties that he be killed at once. After signs of this physical and mental torture he was released with the remark that nobody would say his sword with the blood of such a reptile.

are fully appreciate the difficulties yet to be encountered, not the least of which is the spirit of servility and subservience which has so often been the hearts of the people of Constantinople that even now the Sultan is being fettered and despoiled by his new regime as well as by the Levantine press of the capital. If this continues, there will be danger of his majesty again assuming the role of father of his people. The Sultan now throws the whole blame of maladministration of the empire on the late sultanage, who, as he asserts, for thirty years despoiled him as to the real state of affairs, but he himself will fully shut himself in and disavow all of the empire. If this continues, there will be danger of his majesty again assuming the role of father of his people. STRATHCONA NEWS

LOCALS.

Dr. Archibald and George F. Devereux left this morning on a two weeks' shooting trip down the E. & P. railway line.

Margaret McCrimmon with his cage of cats have finished the first grade on the bridge road and are now working on the second grade.

Mr. J. O. Tipton and Mrs. Tipton went to Oils yesterday afternoon on a new day's visit to friends.

An informal committee meeting of the Strathcona city council was held last night to discuss a number of matters with relation to the post office site, etc.

The express train from the south was nearly two hours late yesterday afternoon, having been held to make quick time with the 21st-continuation from the south.

The steamer Strathcona leaves on Monday morning at nine o'clock for a forty mile excursion trip up the river to Stony Rapids. It will return about nine in the evening.

A view of the congregation of pupils for several months this fall in the Strathcona schools, three class rooms are being filled up in the Douglas block at the corner of Main and Whyte. The Collegiate is completed.

A baseball game was to have taken place last night at the fair grounds between the five brigade team and the team of the Strathcona. As the players did not show up the contest had to be called off.
